N-400 Interview - Decision Cannot Be Made. N-400 interview was over in 5 minutes. Officer said all documentation looks great except for one traffic citation out of state. All I had is a court printout from the clerk's records showing Misdemeanor Class C - Dismissed After Deferral (this was in Texas, so apparently even a speeding ticket is a misdemeanor and considered to be a crime, which I did not know).

If your N-400 was denied and you feel that USCIS was wrong to deny you citizenship, you may request a hearing with a USCIS officer. Your denial letter will explain how to request a hearing and will include the form you need. The form for filing an appeal is the N-336, Request for Hearing on a Decision in Naturalization Proceedings. You must file the form with USCIS, including the correct fee, within 30 days after you receive a denial letter.

08-13-2007, 10:56 PM. Out of the Memphis, TN office, I was informed that checking the "Decision cannot yet be made" box is standard practice there--usually it is in order to accumulate a certain number of tentatively approved N-400's so that a mass ceremony can be arranged at a federal courthouse. I'm guessing that the "decision" is technically made then.

USCIS (U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services) has to verify lots of background information about an N-400 applicant and conducts background checks on all applicants before it makes a decision on the application. Background checks must be cleared before a person can be approved for naturalization and citizenship. Arbitrary things like whether you are male or female, where you are from, the countries in which you have lived, and what you do for a living all may increase the time it takes ...
